Another philosophical description of the source of the bagua is the following by King Wen of the Zhou Dynasty (1122-256 BC): 'When the world began, there was heaven and earth. Heaven mated with the earth and gave birth to everything in the world. Heaven is Qian-gua, and the Earth is K'un-gua. The remaining six guas are their sons and daughters'.

The Genesis creation narrative is the creation myth of both Judaism and Christianity. The narrative is made up of two stories, roughly equivalent to the first two chapters of the Book of Genesis. In the first, Elohim (the Hebrew generic word for God) creates the heavens and the Earth in six days, then rests on, blesses and sanctifies the seventh (i.e. the Biblical Sabbath).

B) 2:29 describes the creation of the earth and its features while 79:27-31 only describes the spreading of the earth . Thus, based on the two verses we know two things: 1. The creation of the earth preceded the formation of the heavens into seven layers 2. The creation of the heavens preceded the 'spreading' of the earth.
