Those additional specimens, including marine turtles and specimens from the Swan Islands and Cayos Miskitos, not treated by Meyer and Wilson (1973) have resulted in the knowledge that 126 species of those three groups (107 lizard, 2 crocodile, and 17 turtle species) currently are documented to occur in Honduras (with several additional lizard species descriptions in press or in preparation), as opposed to the 59 species recognized by Meyer and Wilson (1973). Thus, those 50 years of ...

We report the discovery of a population of Trachemys grayi emolli in southern Honduras. Verification of the species was based on both morphological and molecular data (ND4, COI, ctyb). We discuss problems that arise from the use of sequences from non vouchered pet trade and turtle farm samples for inferring phylogenetic relationships and confirming species identifications.
